Venus, Cupid, Folly and Time is an allegorical painting of about 1545 by the Florentine painter Agnolo Bronzino. It is now in the National Gallery, London. Scholars do not know for certain what the painting depicts. The painting has come to be known as Venus, Cupid, Folly and Time, and it is generally agreed that these are the principal figures. Cupid and Venus kiss in the foreground, while the putto Folly prepares to shower them with rose petals. The bald Time, at the top, looks on and holds a

In Allegories of Time and Space: Japanese Identity in Photography and Architecture, author Jonathan M. Reynolds brings together seemingly disparate artists, designers, and projects into a cohesive monograph exploring the themes of a perceived "homelessness" in post-war Japan. While the book mainly examines photography and architecture, one important commonality among the projects described is that they were mass-produced in one form or another, including reproductions in books, films, and ...
