Spectroscopy is the study of the interaction between matter and electromagnetic radiation as a function of the wavelength or frequency of the radiation. Historically, spectroscopy originated as the study of the wavelength dependence of the absorpition by gas phase matter of visible light dispersed by a prism. We can also consider matter waves and acoustic waves as forms of radiative energy, and recently gravitational waves have been associated with a spectral signature in the context of the Laser

Spectroscopy is the study of the absorpition and emission of light and other radiation by matter. It involves the splitting of light (or more precisely electromagnetic radiation) into its constituent wavelengths (a spectrum), which is done in much the same way as a prism splits light into a rainbow of colours. In fact, old style spectroscopy was ...

FTIR spectroscopy is preferred over dispersive method of IR spectral analysis for several reasons: It is a non-destructive technique. It provides a precise measurement method which requires no external calibration. It can increase scan speed, collecting a scan every second. It is mechanically simple with only one moving part. 41/31/2016
